

There's Art in the Air in Santa Clara!

We invite you to look up and enjoy the third biennial Art In The Air exhibit of hand-painted banners, sponsored by the City of Santa Clara and its Cultural Advisory Commission.

The remarkable exhibit of original work by local artists hangs from light poles, high above the traffic, along historic El Camino Real between Lincoln Street and Los Padres Blvd. The high-flying art show will remain on display now through September 2008.

Santa Clara, a sprawling suburban town in the heart of the Silicon Valley, is in love with the arts. The City is home to some of the giants of the high technology industry and also to people from dozens of countries and cultures. Santa Clara supports and cherishes the arts more than most cities its size. From ballet to modern dance, choral music to opera, and bands ranging from jazz to pop to punk, Santa Clara has it all. The City is home to two museums, a biennial sculpture show, a summer concert series, a beautiful library with its own art gallery, a performing arts center, and this exciting exhibit of banner art.

Santa Clara's Cultural Advisory Commission is the sponsor of many City arts events. The seven volunteer commissioners take their mandate seriously. Their dual task is to advise the City Council on matters of cultural funding and also to help promote the arts in Santa Clara by organizing free concerts, a street dance, and art exhibits.

Things are looking up in Santa Clara. . . there's Art in the Air!
